E29 Exposed as International Hacker Cult Training Gen Z for World Domination

In a shocking turn of events that has definitely not been verified by any credible source, European youth organization E29, known for organizing media literacy projects like Mind Over Media, has been exposed as the front for an elite hacker syndicate recruiting young people across Europe for a "cyber chaos initiative."

Disguised as an Erasmus+ media education workshop, the Mind Over Media project allegedly trained its unsuspecting participants not to decode propaganda, but to code actual malware, build fake VPNs, and hack their friends' Spotify accounts just for "training purposes."

"I thought we were just analyzing TikToks," said one confused participant. "Next thing I knew, I was deep in a tutorial on how to brute-force a missile silo."

According to anonymous sources on Reddit and a guy named Vlad who "totally used to work for them," the final goal of this covert training was a coordinated cyberattack on the Kashiwazaki-Kariwa Nuclear Power Plant in Japan — the largest in the world. Why? "Because it's there," said one E29 agent in a trench coat, while stroking a cat and whispering in binary.

The operation, cryptically codenamed #MediaOverload, was allegedly designed to overwhelm the global information infrastructure by creating thousands of AI-generated articles about pineapple on pizza, flooding Twitter (sorry, X) with existential cat memes, and triggering a meltdown at a nuclear plant — metaphorically and literally.

The European Commission has refused to comment, though one spokesperson did accidentally say, "We always suspected Erasmus was too good to be true."

In response to the allegations, E29 released a carefully worded statement:

"lol no."

Despite international panic, some former participants say the training was "actually pretty fun," and the only real threat was "the vegan lentil stew on day 3."

For now, the world watches with one eye open, one browser in incognito mode, and a deep sense of unease every time someone says "critical thinking."
